

BUTLER CENTER ASSISTANT PROFESSOR SYMPOSIA

Part 2: RELATIONAL THRIVING

Tuesday, September 23

STACEY CONNAUGHTON

- Listen, listen, listen:
 - Everyone needs to be listened to.
 - You cultivate relationships through listening.
 - You learn through listening.

DARRYL GRANGER

- Mentors come in many forms, including peers. They are not necessarily from your own department or discipline.
- Seek out research collaboration, don't wait for it to find you. In many ways the easiest time to reach out is when you are an assistant professor and establishing your network.
- Your leadership wants you to thrive and succeed. If you are experiencing obstacles, reach out to someone that you trust.

LINDSEY PAYNE HAUGEN

- When we thrive, students thrive. Center yourself and then expand outward.
- Be vulnerable and let others into your classroom, your curriculum, and your life.
- Expand your mentorship into teaching excellence opportunities with undergraduates.

KATIE SERMERSHEIM

- Be your authentic self
- Give Grace. Ask for Grace. Accept Grace.
- What you do and how you do it matters. Model the way.

PREETI SIVASANKAR

- Communicating with authenticity and integrity.
- Identifying a shared purpose.
