

Russia/Ukraine Situation (March 3, 2022)

In light of Russia's invasion of Ukraine, Purdue University officials continue to monitor the security situation in Europe. This includes the Office of Programs for Study Abroad, the Office of the Dean of International Programs, the Office of the Provost, and members of the Security and Risk Assessment Committee.

At this time, Purdue has no study abroad activities in either Russia or Ukraine. Purdue officials are closely following developments in this region. Given the distant proximity of active study abroad programs, there are not imminent plans to alter study abroad activities in Europe at this time.

Purdue Study Abroad Staff have a primary interest in the ongoing health and welfare of students who participate in study abroad programs. While we cannot absolutely guarantee the safety of any individual in any specific location, we continually monitor information from official sources and from our international partners and colleagues. Students are urged to embrace prudent precautions, recommended by both local and Purdue leadership, towards having a successful and safe experience.

~ Dr. Brian Harley, Associate Dean of International Programs, Director of Programs for Study Abroad